

explorations

Explorations: A Journal of Language and Literature

Before you start reading...

DOI: 10.25167/EXP13.23.11.0

Here we are with the new (eleventh) issue of Explorations, a journal which is devoted mainly to what has been called, for better or worse, 'anglophone literatures.' As usual, we begin with an interview. In this issue you will find a conversation with Justin Quinn, one of the most interesting Irish writers and critics of the last decades (here we deviate a bit from the anglophone template). The interview deals with Quinn's poems and touches upon the questions of the poetic language, imagination and craft. We are also proud to present a new poem from Justin, a short and moving sonnet about the power of love and memory. The remaining part of the issue includes three articles (on Kipling, Augusta Webster and E. M. Forster) and a review. We hope you will find something inspiring in them, too. Enjoy.